There has been a fair demand for future delivery on contracts, with a decline again to the lowest quotations so far reached this season. Last year speculators were sellers under the belief of lower prices, on the large crop ideas then prevalent; planters, knowing better the real position of the crop prospects, were buyers, and many of them realized a good profit. This year planters are acliers, and willing ones too, at the lowest point so far reached; it may be for the reason that they also, this season, are better posted in relation to the extent of the yield.
